DISTINCTIONS IN THE FACULTY OF COMMERCE

The BCom and BBusSc degrees may be awarded with distinction in a subject, where the student achieves a weighted average of at least 75% in a group of courses in, or related to, that subject (in some cases the average mark required is 80%) in the degree, where the student achieves a weighted average of 80% in all courses.

Honours degrees are awarded by class of pass (first, second class division one, second class division two, or third).

Master's degrees may be awarded with distinction for the dissertation, (in a coursework and dissertation curriculum) for especially meritorious work, the dissertation being in the first class (at least 75%) and at least 70% for the coursework depending on the degree.

in the degree, for especially meritorious work, where the average is at least 75% and no component is below 70%.

FELLOWSHIP

The election by Senate of a member of the faculty to be a fellow recognises sustained and original contributions through research or creative endeavour.

The fellows in the Faculty of Commerce and the years of election are:

2008: RE Dorrington

The following members of the Faculty of Commerce have been elected to a fellowship:

Donald Alan Ross
Professor, Economics

Professor Ross is a Professor of Economics and Dean of Commerce. His work concerns the borderland between economic methodology, cognitive science and the philosophy of science. He is, as attested to by his recent A-rating from the NRF, a world leader in both the philosophy of economics and the philosophy of science.

His PhD was on the philosophy of science, and its thesis is an application of modular architecture from artificial intelligence to a problem in linguistic processing and cognitive learning. He has taught, researched and applied game theory throughout his career, and it informs and unites the majority of his work. His eminence in this field is underscored by the fact that he is the author of the Game Theory article in the Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy.

He is also widely acclaimed internationally for his defence of scientifically inspired metaphysics. He firmly believes that methodological work should be closely informed by empirical research experience. Over the past few years he has increasingly emphasized this activity, which has allowed him to test his abstract ideas in application to phenomena. Since 2008 he has led an interdisciplinary research team of economists and psychologists in applying his 'anti-behavioural' approach to behavioural phenomena, particularly addiction and related disorders of impulsive consumption.

Professor Ross's work uses proper econometric techniques, and quantitatively estimated values that can potentially be added as variables to economic models so as to improve their specification. This represents completely original thinking and it promises to deliver important insights.

Professor Ross was elected in 2012 as President of the Society for Neuroeconomics.

FELLOWSHIP (Continued)

Murray Victor Leibbrandt

Professor, Economics

Professor Murray Leibbrandt is Pro Vice-Chancellor with responsibility for the Poverty and Inequality initiative, Professor of Economics, Director of the Southern African Labour and Development Research Unit (SALDRU) and an IZA Research Fellow. He holds a DST/NRF SARCHI Chair in Poverty and Inequality Research. Driven by the twin ideas that South African researchers needed to be heavily engaged in the production of our own evidence for policy-making and policy assessment, but that our responsibilities in this regard are always to ensure careful data analysis and best-practice methodologies, he engaged on a research programme to make just such a contribution to build these capacities in South Africa.

In the late 1990s he led the process that resulted in the 2001 book Fighting Poverty: Labour Markets and in South Africa. He and Haroon Borat were awarded the Alan Pifer award for this book in 2003. The book has been widely cited and is used both as a quantitative stock-take of 1990s South Africa and as a technical reference work on the methodologies of poverty and inequality analysis. By the 2000s Murray Leibbrandt was part of a small group that were motivating for, and analysing, longitudinal data in order to explore social mobility in South African and, in particular, the dynamic aspects of poverty and inequality. In 2006 the Presidency decided to fund a national longitudinal study, the National Income Dynamics Study (NIDS), Professor Leibbrandt's advice was sought, based on his experience.

His work since 2007 has focused on measuring and explaining trends in poverty and inequality in the post-apartheid period and to understand the socio economic dynamics undergirding changes in poverty and inequality in contemporary South Africa. The work that he has led shows that South Africa has been successful in lowering poverty rates over the post-apartheid period but that inequality has not come down. His work has contributed to this view becoming accepted into recent work of government. The improvements in poverty over the post-apartheid period are driven largely by the ambitious extension of social grants over the post-apartheid period. Due to rising unemployment and low real earnings for vulnerable workers, the labour market has not played a virtuous role in poverty alleviation and Professor Leibbrandt shows that it is the key driver of increased inequality.

SOCIAL RESPONSIVENESS AWARD

The Social Responsiveness Award provides an institutional signal to members of the University that social responsiveness is an important priority.

Stuart Hendry

In 2011 the Faculty of Commerce decided to identify a social responsiveness initiative of sufficient scale to potentially involve an indefinite number of staff and postgraduate contributors, sufficient scope to draw in expertise from the full range of Commerce disciplines, and sufficient importance to constitute a major social contribution. This initiative would be given the status of one of the Faculty's top three strategic priorities.

The Faculty selected the Southern Africa Sustainable Development Initiative (SASDI) Starting Chance campaign which aims to upgrade 30 shack-based crèches into formal centres of excellence for Early Childhood Development (ECD), with each centre acting as a “hub” in a network of support that can provide resources and expertise to other shack-based crèches and constitute a model for promoting pro-education values in poor communities. The Starting Chance campaign was launched in recognition of the fact that a major perpetuating aspect of the cycle of poverty and inequality in the Western Cape is low-stimulus environments for young children, where learning and cognitive development are not emphasized and reinforced.

As Director of the Commerce Faculty's Development Unit for New Enterprise (DUNE) and Co-Founder and Trustee of SASDI, Stuart Hendry is perfectly placed to lead this unique collaboration. In 2010 he led a collaboration between SASDI, the City of Cape Town and student and staff volunteers to build the pilot Starting Chance facility – The Mfuleni Centre for Early Childhood Development – which now serves 220 children.

The second Starting Chance “hub” is now running in Phillippi and the third will be built in New Crossroads, where, at his initiative, the Commerce Faculty took over maintenance responsibility for a property UCT had acquired in the 1990s but was not using. Stuart Hendry is currently personally leading the essential effort to build understanding of our aims in the New Crossroads community, so that the community adopts the initiative as its own.

Stuart Hendry is also coordinating the Faculty's support for Starting Chance. The activities constituting engaged scholarship around the initiative include performing quantitative and qualitative impact assessments, using innovative scientific research practice to deliver policy-driving research studies; and helping centre Principals develop the business plans and acumen they need as newly formalized entities. His leadership and commitment to sustainable community upliftment is not limited to Starting Chance. He serves on the boards of various other NGOs, and in 2013 was elected to Chair the Board of the Homestead Projects for Street Children. In addition, Stuart has over the past five years led his Postgraduate students in raising more than R300,000 for various class charity projects, including Mothers Unite in Lavender Hill, the South African Education Project (SAEP) in Philippi and the Emasithandane Children's Home in Langa.

Kerri Brick
Thesis Title: *Behavioral economic applications to climate change mitigation and adaptation: public good games
and risk experiments*

Kerri Brick has a BCom(Hons) and an MCom from UCT. Her doctoral work is derived from her research as a junior research fellow in the Environmental Economics Policy Research Unit at the University of Cape Town.

Any public policy response to climate change must address both mitigation and adaptation. In this context, Kerri Brick's thesis uses laboratory and field experiments to examine different dimensions of individuals' mitigation and adaptive behaviour. With respect to mitigation, using public good games framed to reflect international and domestic climate change negotiations, the thesis considers the prevalence and impact of self-interested use of equity preferences in multilateral climate change negotiations and the effect of asymmetric mitigation costs on cooperation in meeting a mitigation target in a domestic setting. With respect to adaptation, using a series of risk experiments, the thesis assesses the relationship between risk attitudes and choice of adaptation strategy in the context of (i) uncertainty around the timing and severity of climate variability and, (ii), uncertainty around the outcome of proposed adaptive strategies.

Richard Michael Charlton
Thesis Title: *Extrinsic
uncertainty, ergodic chaos and monetary policy in two intertemporal economic models*

Richard Charlton holds a BA (Hons) from the University of Reading (UK), an MSc from the ICMA Centre for Financial Studies (UK) and an MCom from UCT. His doctoral work was motivated by the experience of writing a previous thesis as well as an interest in general equilibrium theory.

Richard Charlton's thesis examines two intertemporal economic models. The focus of the study is the structure of the equilibrium set by means of an application of the mathematical tools of differential topology and the theory of discrete dynamical systems. Emphasis is placed on the role of subjective probabilities and the size of the set of equilibria, genericity analysis or structural stability of equilibria as well as ergodic chaos and the effect of monetary policy on welfare in dynamical equilibrium. The thesis is theoretical in nature with discussions backed up by simulated examples.

Supervisor: Professor H Abraham (Economics)

Coretha Komba
Thesis Title: The Economics of Climate Change Vulnerability, Adaptation and Mitigation in Tanzania

Coretha Komba received her Masters degree from the International University of Japan in 2004. She enrolled into the Collaborative PhD Programme in the School of Economics in 2009.

Coretha Komba's thesis provides empirical evidence for reducing Tanzanian smallholder farmers' vulnerability to climate change through adaptation and mitigation. The objectives of the study are achieved through identifying the characteristics of vulnerable farmers and assessing the role of adaptation in reducing vulnerability; examining factors influencing farmers' choice of adaptation methods and drawing implications for upscaling desirable methods; and analysing factors affecting household participation in REDD+. The results indicate that more than 50 percent of smallholder farmers are vulnerable to climate change and that adaptation is vital in reducing vulnerability. Farmers have generally used short-season crops, drought-resistant crops, irrigation, changing planting dates and tree planting to adapt to the negative impacts of climate change but the government needs to help farmers overcome the constraints that prevent them from implementing appropriate adaptation methods for their circumstances. The results also show that households are willing to participate in REDD+ if they get an average compensation of US$2,072 per year. The thesis concludes that smallholder farmers are key stakeholders in Tanzania's response to climate change.

Supervisor: A/Professor E Muchapondwa (School of Economics)

*Seán Mfundza Muller
Thesis title: The external validity of treatment effects: an investigation of educational production

Seán Muller graduated from UCT with a Masters in Applied Economics. He won a Rhodes Scholarship to Oxford where he completed an MPhil in Economics. He came back to lecture in UCT's School of Economics and is now an Economic Analyst in the Parliamentary Budget Office.

Seán Muller's thesis examines the issue of external validity of randomised control trials. In particular he argues that interactive relationships between the treatment variable and other variables can make it difficult to extrapolate from a trial to new contexts. His masterful review of the literature and diagnosis of key problems was highly praised by all examiners. He shows the empirical relevance of his analysis by re-analysing a famous US class size experiment "Project STAR" that was conducted in Tennessee. He develops an innovative method to back out a "teacher quality" measure from the data and then applies this to show that the impact of class sizes on student performance depends on the quality of the teacher. Specifically, higher quality teachers are associated with more beneficial effects of smaller classes.

Supervisor: Professor M Wittenberg (Economics)

Martin Phangaphanga
Thesis title: Internal migration, remittances and household welfare: evidence from South Africa

Martin Phangaphanga previously studied economics and demography at the University of Malawi where he received his BSocSc and MA degrees. He joined faculty as lecturer in Economics at the same university before enrolling for the African Economic Research Consortium (AERC) collaborative doctoral programme.

Martin Phangaphanga's thesis empirically examines the linkages between internal migration and household welfare with a focus on black South African households. The analysis is couched in the new economics of labour migration theory, which emphasises the familial participation and community involvement in migration decisions and therefore the potential role of economic linkages between migrants and their original households. Applying both descriptive and rigorous econometric techniques and using various nationally representative surveys, the thesis unpacks the importance of remittance income on household poverty and inequality. Descriptive statistics show that remittances are an income source in about one in five rural black households. However, careful regression analysis dampens the net effect of migration and remittances on income poverty by recognising and controlling for the fact that the poorest households are not able to send migrants and receive remittances. Additionally, the thesis attempts to explain the dampened effect by analysing and estimating the various motives behind remittance behaviour.

In Information Systems:
Boroto Hwabamungu
Thesis Title: The influence of stakeholders' relations on the implementation of information systems strategy in public hospitals in South Africa: an activity theory perspective

Boroto Hwabamungu has a BCom(Hons) in Information Systems from the University of the Western Cape, and an MCom (Informatics) degree from the University of Pretoria. He completed his doctoral research while employed at the Council for Scientific and Industrial Research (CSIR), Pretoria.

Boroto Hwabamungu's thesis undertakes an exploration of the intricacies of stakeholder relations and the implications of these relations on the implementation of information systems (IS) strategy in public hospitals in South Africa. His work follows an interpretive case study approach in two provinces of South Africa: the Western Cape and Kwazulu Natal respectively. The Activity Analysis and Development framework is used as the theoretical lens. Findings reveal that factors such as situational dynamics, the level and motive of stakeholder involvement in IS strategic activities and IS strategy operationalisation activities influence different elements of the IS strategy implementation activity system. These findings are integrated into a theoretical framework. At a practical level, the developed framework can be used as a tool to diagnose stakeholder relations and their implications for implementation of IS strategy in public hospitals in South Africa.

*James Boniface Mwangi
Thesis Title: An analysis of the designed and emergent consequences of mobile banking usage by SMEs in Kenya using ethnographic decision tree modeling

James Boniface Mwangi has a BSc (Computer Science & Statistics) from Jomo Kenyatta University and an MSc (Information Systems) from the University of Nairobi.

James Mwangi's thesis examines the decision criteria used by Kenyan SMEs when making mobile banking adoption and usage decisions, and unearths the intended and unintended consequences of use. The study uses ethnographic decision tree modeling (EDTM) which is a cognitive research approach. Structuration theory is used as a lens to view the complex context in which mobile banking is embedded and adopted by SMEs in Kenya. Decision models developed through EDTM reveal that Kenyan SMEs adopt the technology not because of its affordability, but for such reasons as accessibility, safe custody of daily income, staffing constraints, trust structures, and membership to microfinance institutions that disburse loans through cell phones. EDTM is thus shown to yield findings that have significant implications for fiscal and monetary policy-makers, development experts and mobile banking technology designers.

In Organisational Psychology:
Ameeta Jaga
Thesis title: Antecedents of work-family conflict among Hindu working women in South Africa: Stressors, social support, and cultural values.

Ameeta Jaga has a BCom(Hons) and MCom (with distinction) in Organisational Psychology from UCT. In 2009 she became a member of the academic staff.

Ameeta Jaga's thesis develops a new and culturally nuanced explanatory model of the factors contributing to work-family conflict amongst Hindu working women in South Africa. The model was developed after synthesising the existing literature with data derived from a series of in-depth interviews that generated ideas for further investigation in a quantitative study. The thesis explains the interplay between culturally embedded role stressors, sources of social support, and personal value orientations that have distinctive effects on the work-family conflict experienced by Hindu working women. A deep understanding of the work-family dynamics facing working women from previously disadvantaged groups helps facilitate the development of effective family-friendly policies that encourage such women to enter the world of work and thereby not only transform organisations but help promote social transformation in South Africa.
